I want to generate a random, dynamic grid of rooms and pass the data off to a generator. The application is to have a set of numbers of each type of entity in the dungeon (like an equipment table, or an inventory section, etc). The rooms will be the board size, and so I guess that I will probably just use empty GameObjects for the rooms. This is where my problem begins, however. In my example, I want the random generation to pick one type of entity (be it a room, or an equipment table, or a stairwell, or whatever) and then pick one of 5 possible entities, and add that to the grid. The problem is, I don't know how to do this. How would I randomly generate a grid containing only certain types of GameObjects or how would I determine which type of object to pick within the room? Ideally, the only way I can think of doing this is to make all rooms GameObjects of a certain type and then then have a prefab grid that has all the information about each room - but I don't know how to generate the random grid (i.e. having 5 inventory, 5 stairs, and 5 doors). How would I go about doing this, or is there a better way to make this game? EDIT: It's worth mentioning that the room size should be based on the level size or difficulty setting, so it's not so much an issue of finding a specific number of rooms and then randomly placing them. A: What about just 4 different rooms, and four different sets of 1, 2, 3, and 4 entities? You can setup a template room, and just have the floor, ceiling, walls and doors be prefabbed. You could setup the prefabs in a hierarchical manner too, so you don't have to keep track of where everything is, just set each room as its own prefab, and then set a pointer to the room's prefab in
